Let's Start!

Pronunciation Spot: Peter and Sally talk at the coffee shop. We learn more about their families.

Learning Outcome

Exchange personal information about the home and family in communicative situations.

Ask your partner:

- What are your favorite sports?
- Who are your favorite players?

Can Do Statements

- I can say and use words with the short u sound.
- I can ask questions with a falling and rising voice.
- I can say what I like or dislike.

Let's Explore!

Peter and Sally talk at the coffee shop about sports.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Sally: I want a coffee, how about you? Are you hungry?
Peter: Sure! A cappuccino, please. I'm not hungry.
Sally: Do you like your cappuccino in a cup or a mug?
Peter: A mug, thanks. There is a long lineup. Wait a couple minutes.
Sally: OK ... So, does your family like sports? My family hates sports.
Peter: Yes, my dad really likes sports. He is a good football player. My mom doesn't like it when he watches football on TV.
Sally: What about you?
Peter: I like tennis. It's my favorite sport. I play on Thursdays. And you?
Sally: I do yoga in the park. Look, the line is short now.
Peter: Ah great. I'll get in line.

Let's Practice!

Do you know Peter and Sally's likes and dislikes?

Instructions: Match the question on the left with the response on the right.

Learning Points

Falling and Rising Voice in Questions

Falling Intonation

When you ask a question with where, when, what, which, why, what or how, your voice falls at the end.

Rising Intonation

If the question is a yes/no question, the voice rises at the end.

The stress is usually placed on the last word in questions.

Examples:

Are you going to the game?

When does it start?

Examples:

• Sally: What about you?

Peter: I like tennis. It's my favorite sport.

• Sally: Does your family like sports?

Peter: Yes, my father really likes sports.
